

Christine Macoul

I attended St. Joes from Kindergarten to eighth grade. During my time there, I learned many lessons that went beyond the classroom and had some incredible teachers along the way. From being a red hat in Ms. Byron's Kindergarten graduation, to using the blue books in Ms. Aubin's history class, I left St. Joes with many fond memories. My first grade teacher was Mrs. O and because of her, I learned why Alexander had a terrible, horrible, no good very bad day. That is still one of my favorite childhood books to this day. In fifth grade, we learned all the prepositions by memorizing them in a song. I can still recite that song to a tee. However, my time at St. Joes goes beyond just educational preparation. I have many great memories of playing sports, attending dances and running around the playground at recess with my friends.

After graduating from St. Joes, I attended Central Catholic High School and then went on to study at the University of New Hampshire. At UNH, I earned my Bachelors of Science Degree in Business Administration and Marketing with a minor in Psychology. After college, I moved to Australia and work at the National Australia Bank as an Events Marketing Manager. I currently work in Boston as a Marketing Specialist at The Kessler Group, a financial consulting and marketing firm. I also just started at Northeastern University in pursuit of my MBA degree.

I'm grateful for the lessons I learned while attending St. Joes but more importantly, I'm grateful for the people I met. There are times during your life when you encounter certain individuals that leave a lasting impression. I am happy to say that I met a few of them at St. Joes. I developed some wonderful friendships and encountered teachers that became lifelong educators.